

Deezer named to Newsweek's list of the world's most trustworthy companies in 2025

Following a comprehensive study from Statista, carried out across 20 countries, the global music streaming service made the prestigious list.

Paris, September 4, 2025 – Deezer (Paris Euronext: DEEZR), the global music experiences platform, has been named to Newsweek's list of the world's most trustworthy companies in 2025. The ranking includes 1000 companies in 20 countries, and is based on surveys of 65,000 people as well as extensive social media listening. Deezer is the only music streaming company on the list and is ranked in the Media & Entertainment category, along with music industry heavyweights such as Warner Music Group and Universal Music Group.

"I'm incredibly proud that Deezer is considered one of the most trustworthy companies in the world," said Alexis Lanternier, CEO of Deezer. "It shows that our commitment to fairness and transparency in the music business resonates not only with our industry peers, but also with music fans across the world. Our investment in R&D for fairer artist payments, fraud prevention, and most recently AI tagging, has put us in the global spotlight and showcases that we genuinely care about the future of music. This, in combination with delivering world class music experiences, both in the app and through our fan events, has led us to this achievement."
